Customer Reviews

"I am deeply impressed by the pedagogical considerations that Prof. Ross and her team put into the project. The approaches to teaching Mandarin Chinese in this series reflected the authors' rich knowledge of the Chinese grammar and their vast experience in teaching the language. The materials developed are pedagogically well conceived and equally well supported by theories of language learning/teaching. A truly innovative and delightful addition to the Chinese teaching field."
—Cecilia Chang, Williams College, USA

"This text offers a refreshing approach to learning Chinese that is lacking in the vast majority of learning materials. Each dialogue is contextualized so learners better understand how the language is used in a variety of communicative situations. Students learn not only what to say, but how to use the right language in a given context based on their role, and when and where the situation occurs. Sentence pyramid exercises provide a stepped approach that allows students to actually rehearse and perform the dialogues. The material is presented in manageable units with clear and concise explanations that are understandable to students not familiar with linguistics jargon. Valuable information on the social and cultural implications of the language is also provided. This is one of the few textbooks on the market that delays the introduction of Chinese characters. This insightful approach allows learners to gain a foundation in the spoken language before being inundated with characters to which they have little context in which to place them. Furthermore, these materials use an innovative diglot approach to introduce Chinese characters where newly learned characters are incorporated into pinyin texts. This effectively eases students into reading without overburdening them. By the end of the text, dialogues and other materials are presented almost entirely in Chinese characters. This approach provides excellent spiraling and reinforcement of characters learned."- Matthew Christensen, Brigham Young University, USA "One of the very few accessible and clearly structured textbooks for the complete beginner in Mandarin, which is absolutely designed with the non-native Chinese speaker in mind. The gradual introduction of the script, together with the clear but not overly simplistic grammatical explanations, will prove particularly useful for beginners."-Frances Weightman, The University of Leeds, UK "An excellent introductory course from a dedicated team. This course serves as a practical guide with the language knowledge and cultural tips you need for daily communication with the Chinese people."- Wei Jin, The School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, UK

Listening Workbook: Communicating in Chinese series (Yale University Press 1999).

I am using this book right now for my Chinese 101 course. It is very easy to read and follow. The vocab is useful and examples are quite clear. It starts with you learning pinyin and then by around chapter 6 moves into characters. The fact that you can get all the dialogues and listening supplements online free on their website is a huge plus! The workbook that goes along with this is also quite helpful.

Thank you very much for packing carefully. How wonderful! I'm so happy and you made my day.

This has got to be one of the biggest disappointments, and waste of money, that I have ever experienced in a language book. Firstly, Routledge claims there's a companion website but there is none. Secondly, when you write to them to ask about it, you get no reply. Thirdly, it is very difficult and confusing to match what is on the cd to what is in the book, and further, although it appears that exercises have a listening component, none such exists. For example, Lesson 1 Workbook, Page 1 "Listen and Repeat" ... no such track exists. The book is very attractive, and expensive but the publisher's blurb is very misleading, and I am very angry. As a language teacher I cannot for the life of me recommend Routledge.

Matches the text book perfectly. Don't forget to also match the text and the work book with the on-line resources.
