Disappointed big time. These are bigger than the average postcard. Thus if you want to mail them it'll cost more. The paper is NOT heavy at all. Way too thin to withstand being mailed.

I loved everyone of these. Post cards such a great way to send a Hello note to someone, Great if you want a coloring project that just takes little time to finish

They are OK, nothing to rave about but will use them.

Nice cards on heavy stock. I sent them to the grandkids who loved them!

Beautiful with many assorted occasions cards to color.

Color to your heart's content on these images then mail them as greeting card postcards. Friends loved the birthday postcards I've sent. Crayons or color pencils both work well on the card stock. Nice assortment for different occasions.

Too fine to color without glasses and tiny tip pens. Not a fan.

I scoured the cards several times. I couldn't find the cover image, or any part of it, on any of the cards. The cover image was one of the reasons I bought the book. I don't like the artist's style in many of the images; they are cartoonist. There are enough floral images for me to keep the book, however. Since the cartoonist images are so simple I can add my own details, play with color, and practice different techniques. The card stock is thick enough that alcohol pens don't bleed through to the backing paper. The colors do show on the back. To be fair, I haven't found any cards where they don't. I prefer to color with alcohol pens. They come out of the pen smoothly and color quickly unlike gel pens. They also dry to the touch fast. Bic pens are my current favourite. They have the name of the color on the barrel of the pen. You can get them in sets of 36 colors and find them at grocery stores, Wal-Mart, office supply stores and . also has the ultra fine point set. They aren't expensive.
