Defense - What no radios, Silver has to shout her orders? I read Pursuit and looked forward to reading Defense, book 2 in the series. I was disturbed to find Silver shouting her orders instead of using comm equipment, it's in the future and part of the tac suit. After the first chapter, things got better and made for an interesting story. The newer characters need more developing, but the plot was interesting. There's more to the series, although this part was completed; the main objective is continuing in the next part of the series. Pursuit - I want a cruiser. Another well written suspense that immerses the reader in a fast paced action scifi. The main characters, AI and vehicle are well developed along with an interesting plot. Everything is well described and doesn't take much to visualize the surroundings. This will be a good series as all components develop more as the stories continue. I thoroughly enjoyed this short story, although scifi isn't the best genre for me. There's enough components to this story to keep me reading. I definitely could use the suit, especially on cycling trips during the Texas summer. Gee, no donut stops. I contacted Fairfield Publishing volunteering to do reviews.

The saga of Silver Cane continues in Defense. But it becomes more complicated. Silver Cane has additional duties now that she has been appointed Chief of Police after everyone else above her was killed in a massive explosion at police headquarters by a nasty villain. She frets and complains about being pulled from the field to fulfill the new administrative role. Don't worry. however, while she has been told she has to step down on field work she still gets involved in some of the most dangerous situations. At the same time as she has to administrate the department she has to also find a way to train new agents to the high standards the work requires. This calls for her to learn to be able to recognize the strengths of the newbies and utilize them to accomplish missions as well as make sure they are proficient in common agent tasks. Somehow she finds a way to accomplish all of this with the aid of the AI on Razor ship that has become more human in its interactions. She has been told she has to spend less on her AI and more on the system AI. As they say, fat chance. As the story moves along at a usual fast pace the complications multiply and her ability to multi-task by not only by her fulfilling her new administrative job but also staying focused on a developing mission leads her to follow her instincts which is good for the system. This chapter in the series ends on a cliff hanger that like the old Saturday morning movie serials will have you wanting for the next book in the series to appear much sooner than later.

Definitely a "beach book", this novel is a fast read at only 73 pages. Mr. Victor describes our intrepid heroine, Agent Silver, as having a "hot headed, action first approach". This certainly describes Silver Cane. I look forward to the next installment.

I enjoyed the second book of the Silver Cane series. A short read, but packed full of action and adventure. With Silver's promotion, I see a lot more problems she will have to solve in the future. Looking forward to where her story goes to next.
